An hysterically funny book!

◆This is a collection of over 100 stories spanning 55 years and they're at least 80% true. They're mostly pants-wetting funny, sometimes poignant and profound, often bawdy, sometimes chilling, and always engaging and enjoyable. Culture clash is a frequent theme. So are food, phoniness and incompetence. There's also sex, drugs and rock & roll. Even the sex and drug stories are funny. There are four murders.

Reader Reaction:

"This book is so funny that I nearly peed in my pants. My girlfriend didn't think it was funny, so I got a new girlfriend."

"I loved the chapter with the three-way sex scene. It seemed very familiar. Was I there?"

"I never knew my uncle was suspected of being a drug dealer and running a warehouse while in college, that he had a 15-year-old girlfriend when he was 21, that he nearly killed himself in a school science experiment, that he didn't know how to wear a jockstrap, that he was the last male date for a woman before she tried being a lesbian or that his art professor boosted his grade to keep him from blabbing about the professor groping him during a three-way. It will be tough to beat his record."

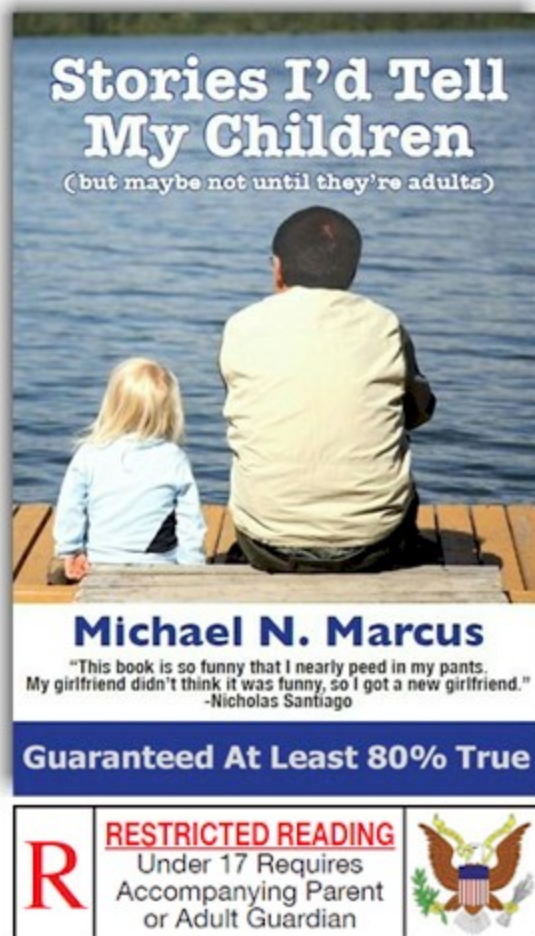

"Haven't had this much fun in bed since, gee, let's not go there. This is the funniest book I've ever read. Thanks for making the dirty parts easy to find! Saved me time. A book you can't put down, don't want to let go of and don't want your kids to get their hands on. You may be asked, 'Did you do that when you were young?'"

"I was rolling with laughter. If you liked Animal House, do yourself a favor and get this book."

"Michael, did you ever stop to consider the remote possibility that when you marched into police headquarters in the winter, wearing a black rubber suit, carrying a spear gun and with a long knife strapped to your leg, that maybe the cops wouldn't think it was funny and they'd SHOOT YOU?"

"I'm absolutely shocked. I thought I married a virgin."

"I had no idea my uncle was such a stud."

Midwest Book Review: FIVE STARS,
"a thoughtful and fun read,
highly recommended."
